

Goldman Sachs Community TeamWorks Volunteers Hold Annual Day of Learning at St. Luke's LifeWorks

STAMFORD, CT (June 24, 2011) – Professionals from Goldman Sachs volunteered in the firm's annual Day of Learning event for St. Luke's LifeWorks participants as part of the Community TeamWorks initiative. Throughout the course of the Goldman Sachs Day of Learning, volunteers conducted three workshops at SLLW's Franklin Commons campus. The workshops were centered on: interview skills, during which participants practiced their skills with the assistance of video replay; resume and cover letter improvement and writing; and a general session featuring topics such as financial management. The Day of Learning workshops resonate with St. Luke's LifeWorks' job preparation and employment initiatives that assist participants with career development, the job application process, and computer training.

"We are immensely grateful to the great people at Goldman Sachs. Their commitment to giving back is not only inspiring, but also of great value to the people we serve. Thanks in part to them, we have made 149 job placements in the past 11 ½ months" says SLLW CEO, Jason T. Shaplen.
